ROMANTIC SECRETS

CAN YOU BLAME ME FOR CRYING MY-SELF TO SLEEP THAT NIGHT...?

ROMANTIC SECRETS

NO FISHIN'

For about ten minutes, Henry Cassidy had been following the movements of the stranger at the edge of the reservoir. He removed the binoculars from his eyes and spoke to his daughter, Frances.

"I think I'll go down to the reservoir and check on the fellow. Doesn't look like Mike Burgess or Hank Rees."

"You just stay here and rest," suggested the young smiling girl with dark brown hair and light pale blue eyes. "I sort of suspect you are tired from yesterday's hike to town. I'll go over and see what the stranger is doing."

Henry Cassidy was state ranger for the county. His home was a five room house built on top of a hundred foot steel tower. His living room was made out of sheet glass and gave him a clear view of the country side for miles around. His daughter, Frances, acted as housekeeper. In addition she was a deputy sheriff. She walked out to the porch and entered a small cable car. This took her down to the road where her jeep was parked. She drove for a few minutes until she reached the main road. Then she parked the car and stopped before a gate. The area was protected by a large wire fence. A sign read: "Moundridge Water Reservoir. Keep Out. This Means YOU." She opened the lock with her key and went inside the area. Then she went downhill slowly until she came to the water's edge. A young man wearing a dark brown shirt and trousers to match was seated on a camp chair. His fishing rod was next to him.

"Hello," she greeted with a cheerfulness in her voice.

The young man quickly turned around with a startled look on his face.

"Didn't hear you coming at all," he admitted. "You must be wearing some kind of special noiseless shoes. I do have keen ears. At least I am glad you aren't a big bear or lion."

"No bears or lions in this state," pointed out the girl. "I want to see your fishing license."

The young man had observed the silver badge that the pretty girl was wearing.

"A female deputy sheriff," he said as he handed her his fishing license which he took from his wallet.

"Martin Perseman. Resident of the State, but not of the county. I see you live in the Big City."

"Any crime against living in the Big City?" asked the young man. "You know my name. What's yours?"

"Frances Cassidy," answered the smiling girl. "This reservoir is closed to all people in the state and county except actual residents of the Moundridge area. And since you don't live here, then you can't fish here."

"Are you going to arrest me?" he challenged with mock fright in his voice.

"Oh, no," was the quick response. "Go ahead and finish your fishing. But you can't come back again. Catch many fish?"

In answer to that last question, the young man bent down and pulled in his chain fish holder.

"Three bass. All legal size. And four sunnies. Never saw sunnies so big. This reservoir is a paradise for fishing. I really would like to fish here for the rest of the season. Think I'll look around and rent a small shack. That will make me a legal resident of the Moundridge area."

"If you want to do any renting, you better see Phillips the real estate man. Turn left on Highway 22. He always has several homes to rent."

The two continued talking for some time and then Frances glanced at her wrist watch.

"I have to hurry home," she told Martin Perseman. "I must relieve dad. He has a lot of letters to answer. Sportsmen write him for advice."

Frances returned and told her father about the young man. At supper the phone rang and her father answered it.

"Tom Phillips wants to come over. Has a friend he wants to introduce to you."

Frances was about to reply in the negative when she changed her mind and told her father it would be o.k. Half an hour later there was a buzz on the signal bell. That meant she should send the small cable car down. This she did and soon she faced two men. The older one was the real estate man. The younger man was Martin Perseman.

"Told me how you two met," began Tom Phillips. "Wanted to meet you and your dad the regular way. So I brought him here. I knew his dad for many years."

When Martin Perseman left that evening, he had a date to return the next morning at ten. He was prompt and Frances teased him.

"Even though you are staying with Tom Phillips, you can't fish in the reservoir. So don't ask me for permission. However you can rent a boat at Lake Katchewon and fish there. I'll show you the place."

Lake Katchewon was three miles from the Moundridge Reservoir. Frances took him out in a rowboat and watched him fish. It was so nice and peaceful. They returned at noon to the small boat house and Pop Garruters fixed up a bite for the two of them.

"How many fish did you catch?" asked Pop.

"Not one," admitted Martin Perseman.

"Either you weren't using the right bait or you weren't wide awake when the fish tackled your hooks," scolded the veteran fisherman. "I have been here for almost forty years. There are fish in this water."

In the afternoon they went back in the boat again. One thing was evident. Martin Perseman was interested in something else rather than the famous sport of fresh water fishing.

"I would like to see you tomorrow, day after and day after the day after," he told Frances.

"I am busy tomorrow," she replied. "Must make out some official reports. But the day after is yours."

For the next three weeks the two went out together. It was evident to Henry Cassidy that his daughter and Martin were deeply in love with each other.

"I really spotted him first," he laughed to Tom Phillips. "He's a real nice fellow."

At that very moment the two young happy people were seated on two comfortable beach chairs set up by Pop Garruters on his fishing pier. They were holding hands.

"It is so peaceful here," said Martin Perseman. "I just feel I never want to leave this area."

"Does that mean you will have to leave it soon?" asked Frances with a slight falter in her voice.

Martin Perseman arose from his chair and Frances did the same. They were facing each other. Then instinctively they were in each others arms. Their lips met in their first kiss.

"This is for keeps," Martin Perseman said. "You will have to change your name from Cassidy to Perseman."

"I think we better tell that to dad," suggested a very happy young girl.

The two returned to Frances' home and Tom Phillips was there playing a game of checkers with her father. Frances told him the news.

"I congratulate you two young folks," he told them. "But there is one thing I want to get straight, young man. I hope you aren't marrying my daughter so you can fish in the Moundridge Water Reservoir. Only because you are in love with her."

"Only because I am in love with her," snapped back Martin Perseman.

"And let us get one thing straight. Any time I want to fish in that reservoir, I am the only person not a resident in the Moundridge area who can do it legally."

Frances Cassidy looked carefully at the man who would soon be her husband, and hesitated about asking him why he had made that statement. It definitely was a challenge. She said nothing and a few minutes there was silence. But Tom Phillips knew the cue.

"Why can you fish there?" he asked to a question of which he already knew the correct reply.

"Because I happen to own the Moundridge Water Company," grinned the young man.

Frances was in his arms and she had only one thing to say before he kissed her.

"Don't be such a tease. I knew who you were all the time. There's a clipping about you, with your picture in my desk. I'm marrying you for you, and not for your water company."

ROMANTIC SECRETS

THE PAINTING TOOK AGES... AND BARRY HAD A HUGE APPETITE! HE LIKED TINNED CAVIAR AND EXOTIC DISHES TOO...

I WAS TIRED, DISCOURAGED. THEN BARRY'S DEEP VOICE RE-ASSURED ME, HIS ARMS SUPPORTED ME! IT WAS LOVE, I THOUGHT...

ROMANTIC SECRETS

AT FIRST I TRIED THE BETTER ART STORES, THEN THE POORER ONES! FINALLY THE CURIO SHOPS! NONE OF THEM WANTED BARRY'S WORK! FINALLY, I KNEW I'D HAVE TO PAWN SOMETHING...

HE WAS SO KIND AND SYMPATHETIC! IT WAS A RELIEF TO TALK TO SOMEONE WHO DIDN'T HATE PEOPLE THE WAY BARRY DID...

ROMANTIC SECRETS

I FOUND MYSELF TELLING SAM ABOUT BARRY...

... SO THINGS ARE TOUGH RIGHT NOW, BUT I KNOW HE'LL MAKE GOOD!

OF COURSE HE WILL! MEANWHILE, HAVE DINNER WITH ME LATER THIS WEEK! PERHAPS YOU CAN SHOW ME ANOTHER OF BARRY'S PAINTINGS THEN!

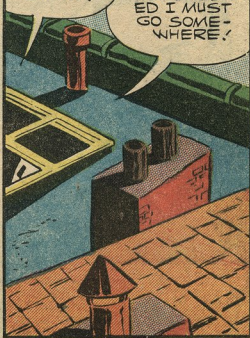

IT'S NICE OF YOU TO LOOK AFTER THIS ARTIST FELLOW BUT YOU NEED A LITTLE LOOKING AFTER YOURSELF.

OH, I CAN TAKE CARE OF MYSELF! SEE YOU HERE THURSDAY NIGHT!

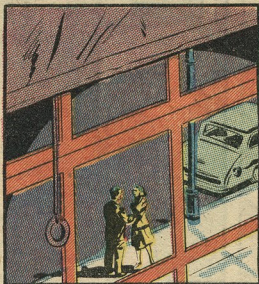

I BOUGHT SOME GROCERIES WITH SOME OF YOUR MONEY. IS IT ALL RIGHT, BARRY?

OF COURSE! HURRY AND EAT. I JUST REMEMBERED I MUST GO SOMEWHERE.

I WATCHED BARRY FROM MY WINDOW. STRANGELY ENOUGH, I DIDN'T MIND SO MUCH WHEN I LEARNED WHERE HE HAD TO GO...

BARRY WILL SUCCEED--AND WHEN HE DOES, HE'LL REALIZE HOW MUCH I HELPED HIM. MR. AINSLEY LIKES HIS WORK, I'M SURE!

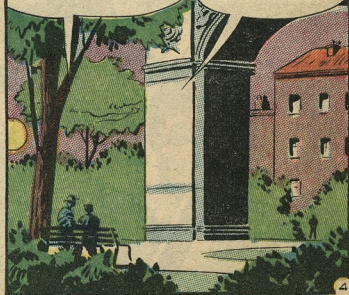

I SAW SAM THAT WEEK! HE BOUGHT ANOTHER PAINTING. THE NEXT WEEK, BARRY GOT A CHECK FROM HOME SO I DIDN'T SHOW SAM ANY PAINTINGS...

IT'S GOOD TO SEE YOU AND TALK ABOUT SOMETHING BESIDES ART, ELLEN!

I THINK SO TOO! I FEEL RELAXED WHEN I'M WITH YOU!

ROMANTIC SECRETS

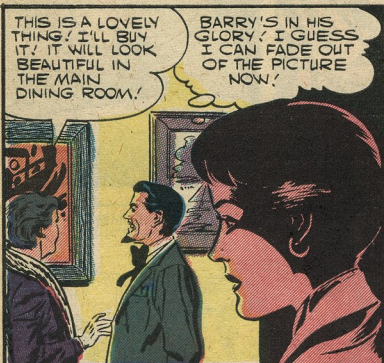

I HATED HIM! HE'D AROUSED FEELINGS I DIDN'T KNOW EXISTED! I HURRIED BACK TO BARRY, SEEK-ING RE-ASSURANCE...

ROMANTIC SECRETS

SAM TOOK OVER THE DETAILS, PAID FOR THE EMPTY STORE, THE ADS IN THE PAPER, AND HE WAS IMPERSONAL ABOUT IT ALL...
